

LATE PLOVER SAYS HEOPES TO JO ALLIES

Confiding, and informed that he also was working for the So. district attorney's office," Randell says. "Jefferson is now in state of Washington." I heard that story out because he was afraid certain bunch of soldiers was going to beat him up."

Randell also declares that Russell told him that the general was one of the persons who helped Jefferson to purchase his discharge from the army.

"Then Jefferson came to me, said he took me for a fisher, and said that there were a whole lot of boys in the army who would go to the front," Randell says. I promised Jefferson that I would want what I could for them."

He adds that shortly after his release from Oahu, he went to the British consul to obtain financial assistance to get to Australia, but that the consul referred him to the British Club. At the British Club Randell says he was told that organization had no funds available.

Randell says he saw all the time that young "Jack" Gordon intended to enlist in the British Army. "I saw it the first day he was in Honolulu," he declares. "I guess that by this time he has already enlisted."

Gordon probably sent his own passage money from Honolulu to Australia, according to Randell.

HILo GAS COMPANY WILL BEGIN OPERATING NOV. 1

(Special Star-Bulletin Correspondence)

HILo, April 28.—We have signed up 25 consumers for our gas," stated E. J. Smith, the promoter of the Hilo Gas Company yesterday. "And we intend to be delivering gas in this city by November 1, this year."

According to Mr. Smith, the transaction has been arranged. His attorney and the papers are expected to reach Hilo in the near future. Estimates have been received from mainland engineers, who have constructed plants there, and the figures are very pleasing to the promoters.

At first gas will be delivered from Waikoloa to Puuao (Scott street), Reeds Island, Waianaeus street, to a point above the Hilo Hospital, Bridge street, to One Mile Post, and all these are called the "inside districts."

The manner in which the people are coming forward and signing agreements to take gas for cooking purposes is pleasing the promoters and they declare that there will be many more customers later on when the pipes and mains are laid.

His Sweetheart's Watery Grave Was Naught But Dream

"Save my sweetheart, she drowned!"

This was the startling cry made to the police yesterday afternoon near Pier 10 at the foot of Fort street.

In instant there was a great hubbub. An ambulance dashed to the scene, more police came, a crowd gathered.

Jose Mattos, an old Puerto Rican waved his arms and rolled his eyes. Through a Spanish interpreter he told that his sweetheart had climbed or jumped off the pier, had gone down, leaving nothing but bubbles, and didn't come up.

Who the sweetheart was and why she did it, the police couldn't learn.

The old man was taken to the emergency hospital at the city jail, where he told his whole story in Spanish to D. R. Aver, who understands that language. Policemen were left at the pier to watch for "sweethearts" to appear. She didn't.

"I live in the Palama district," Jose told Dr. Aver, "and borrowed a boat yesterday to pick up driftwood. I had been drinking a little and got off at Pier 10 to get a cup of coffee. When I returned the boat was gone. I swam over to look for it at the same time a woman fainted over. The next instant she was in the water. I hurried to the police."

This morning one of the detectives asked Jose why he pushed the woman off the pier.

He exclaimed: "She push her! No! She is my sweetheart!"

When Detective Captain McDuffie examined the sweethearts one this morning the story was different.

Through an interpreter, Jose said:

"Yesterday is all a dream to me. I don't remember just what happened. Maybe I dreamed it all."

As the captain ordered Jose dismissed, he said:

"Be more careful of your sweetheart hereafter."

The end came to Fred Wright in the Queen's hospital at 1:15 yesterday afternoon. His brother, George Wright, and brother-in-law, William Simpson, were with him.

The funeral is being held at 3 this afternoon. Williams' undertakers, Rev. Canon Alt of St. Andrew's Cathedral officiating under the auspices of Honolulu Anglican Mounted Battalion are to attend; pall-bearers are the police.
